

Mr. Dharmendra

Greetings to you from Ziac Software!!

Now it is the right topic to discuss about BlackBerry® Mobile handset's Security. BlackBerry® is one of the smart phones of Canadian company, Research in Motion. The design of BlackBerry® security is that the email messages that are sent between the BlackBerry® Internet Service and messaging server are encrypted using SSL encryption.

SSL encryption used by BlackBerry® is the Secured Sockets Layer technology to create a highly secure connection, browse web sites and particularly banking web sites. SSL is the standard encryption protocol that is used in many online banking transactions, ecommerce transactions, and other wireless transactions on mobile devices and computers. Using a highly secure connection helps to protect against identity theft, unauthorized use of confidential financial data, protect device from data theft, viruses and spyware. The SSL encryption helps to protect data that is sent or received using the browser.

The encryption can be determined when connection uses SSL encryption, a closed lock icon appears in the upper-right corner of the browser screen. When connection does not use SSL encryption, an open lock icon appears.

BlackBerry® device does not run applications outright that are received as attachments in email messages. The BlackBerry® Internet Service processes attachments and renders them in a format that is designed to protect you from potentially damaging attachment code such as macros.

BlackBerry® device has the built-in firewall to block incoming SMS text messages and PIN messages, both of which are not encrypted. If the messaging servers support SSL encryption then only protected messages by SSL encryption are received on BlackBerry® device by blocking incoming SMS text messages and PIN messages without SSL encryption.

When the encryption of BlackBerry® device data is set up by using the content protection feature, BlackBerry® device is designed to be protected against users with malicious intent who could attempt to steal your data directly from the internal hardware. No one can read the encrypted data without the device password.

BlackBerry® device stores GPS location information however, third-party applications cannot access GPS location information automatically. When applications have access to BlackBerry's GPS location information, they could potentially track your location or report your location back to a server.

These are some of technically advanced features of BlackBerry® which has gained loyalty of its user who love their data to be significantly protected.
